

According to previous studies, parent's perspectives about raising children based on their life conditions and traditions can affect parental attitude, resulting in significant impact on children's personality development. Furthermore, rural and urban families have different beliefs and values on how to raise a child. Thus, parenting in different areas may also differ, consequently, children in rural and urban areas may have different life perspectives as well.

Methods:

Coleman, M., Ganong, L., Clark, J., & Madsen, R. (1989). Parenting Perceptions in Rural and Urban Families: Is There a Difference? Journal of Marriage and Family, 51(2), 329-335.

This source makes comparisons between the lives in rural and urban areas and how that affects parental behavior which can significantly impact their children's perception of their surroundings and shapes their way of setting life goals. For this reason, this source contains information that is highly relevant to my research topic and potentially serves as key to finding answers.

Outcomes:

Previous research studies did not show that individuals from different areas are more discipline than others.
